

2014 HEPI-HEA Spring Conference

Wednesday 21 May 2014

British Academy, London SW1

The quality of the student academic experience is under the spotlight like never before. The Government wants students to be consumers but is frustrated at the pace of change. Students say they want to be partners in learning but do not always get sufficient attention. Higher education institutions say they are improving the learning experience but that it is hard to measure success.

- Just what does a good student academic experience look like at the most innovative institutions?
- Are students in the UK getting a better or worse experience than students in other countries?
- What do the different data on the quality of education in British universities show?

All these issues will be discussed in detail at the HEPI Spring Conference, organised in partnership with the Higher Education Academy with media partner the Times Higher Education.

Attendees will also get the first sight of the 2014 HEPI / HEA Student Academic Experience survey. For the first time, this annual survey will give a complete picture of the education being received in England by students paying £9,000 a year. This year's survey also includes the first ever comprehensive assessment of the well-being of students in UK universities, which will be compared on the day to the well-being of the nation as a whole.

Speakers include: the Rt Hon David Willetts, Minister for Universities & Science; Professor Stephanie Marshall, Chief Executive, Higher Education Academy; Jenni Russell, Columnist, The Times; Phil Baty, Editor, Times Higher Education World University Rankings; Sonia Sodha, Head of Public Services & Consumer Rights Policy, Which?; Rob Behrens, Chief Executive, Office of the Independent Adjudicator; Rachel Wenstone, Vice President, Higher Education, NUS; Anthony McClaran, Chief Executive, Quality Assurance Agency; Professor Edward Acton, Vice Chancellor, University of East Anglia; Libby Hackett, Chief Executive of the University Alliance; and Professor Alison Wride, Provost, GSM London.

In addition, Nick Hillman, HEPI Director and Dr Paul Bennett, HEA Director of Surveys will provide a detailed briefing at the conference on the findings from the 2014 HEPI-HEA Student Academic Experience Survey. Included in the delegate fee will be a copy of the published findings from the 2014 survey.
